1821	10 September	Oxford, OXF	died	On Monday last died, much lamented, Mr. Thomas Couldry, aged 76 years. He was originally bred to the trade of a house carpenter and was for many years clerk to the parish church of St. Ebbe, in this city, but for a considerable time has declined to act in either of those callings. He for many years practised playing the violin, and was in great repute in this place at Gentlemen's private balls, as well as at different country assemblies, far and wide. In point of celebrity as a player of country dances, he probably came the nearest to the Scots Gows of any other performer in the British dominions. Such was the strength of his musical memory, that he was seldom known to fail in being able to play any dance called for, and to give the figures, if required. He was also considered a well-skilled, scientific, and practical ringer, and on the evening of his burial a dumb peal was performed by his brethren. - To sum up the character of this excellent man, he was, under every temptation, rigorously sober, of great civility and mildness of manners, and, what is of greater importance, he was an honest man, and a sincere believer in the most essential points of the christian [sic] religion. This is written by one who of many others can bear testimony to the truth of this narrative.	Jackson's Oxford Journal , 15 September 1821, 3

1836	July	Tubney, BKS		Poor old James Alder, of Tubney, is well known to hundreds of our readers as a player on the bass viol of no contemptable ability; and as an itinerant musician who has ministered many times to their pleasures in their bouyant moments, and whose magic tones have sometimes dispersed a cloud of melancholy from their hearts. 1854	late August	Headington, OXF	in the workhouse	"Old Brook," the celebrated fiddler, well known in the county of Oxford and the adjacent counties, who for upwards of 40 years attended the village feasts, &c., died in the Oxford workhouse, on Sunday last, aged 74, where he had been an inmate about a week. He formerly practised as a miniature painter.	Oxford Chronicle and Berks and Bucks Gazette , 9 September 1854, 4
1854	3 September	Oxford, OXF	died	An eccentric character, well known as "Old Brooks," the celebrated fiddler, was taken ill in Oxford about a fortnight ago, and was removed to the Workhouse, at which place he died on Sunday last, aged 74. The deceased had for the last forty years been in the habit of attending all the feasts and fairs in this and the adjoining counties, and as a musician few excelled him. Many years ago he practised as a miniature painter, and his portraits were distinguished for their fidelity and exquisite finish, but for a long time he abandoned that pursuit, and devoted himself exclusively to what appeared to be more congenial to him, an itinerant musical occupation.	Jackson's Oxford Journal , 9 September 1854, 5

HAMBLETON, James ('Young Snuff') alias FITZGERALD					Pandean pipes
1812	11 November	London	arrested on suspicion of theft		The Morning Chronicle , 13 November 1812, 3
1812	12 November	Bow Street, London	in magistrates court	Wednesday evening, about a quarter before seven o'clock, as Nicholl's party of the patrol, consisting of himself, Lumberick and Smith, were passing from Chandos-street to Hemming's-row, they met with a gang of robbers, who have, for a length of time, been the terror of the town. The gang were about to attack the Officers, but instantly discovering who they were dispersed in different directions ; however, the Officers discovered the robbers at the same instant, pursued and secured three of them. Yesterday they were brought before Mr. Birnie, when they all proved to be notorious characters. James Bainbridge, John Brooks, and James Hambleton, alias Fitzgerald, alias Young Snuff... Young Snuff said he got his living by parading the streets playing the mouth organ, or Pan's pipes. They were all committed for further examination, and in the mean time the parties who are known to have been robbed will receive notices to attend to identify them.	The Morning Chronicle , 13 November 1812, 3
